HOUSE HISTORY

From CADW Listing schedule of house:

Second half of C16 regional storied end chimney house, originally with cross-passage plan. Significant as belonging to a class of early storied examples which can be seen as prototypical of the developed Snowdonia storied end chimney type. The persistence of cusped windbracing in the upper hall/solar space and the cross-passage are the survivals of the late medieval open hall tradition. Similarly, the corbelling out of the first floor chimney is an early diagnostic feature among this type of building. Lower service and stable/byre additions of the late C17/early C18 were added to the rear and to the NE respectively.

Lower service wing to rear, with squat end chimney.

Mortising evidence for former post-and panel screens (section of screen stored in adjoining byre). Flat, stopped-chamfered bressummer to wide fireplace in former hall (to R) and chamfered main beams visible in ground floor rooms.

The first-floor hall/solar is still partly open to the (4 bay) roof, the remainder is visible in the attic; this is of 3 bays with fine collar-and-raking-strut trusses, two tiers of cusped windbraces and original purlins and rafters; original projecting oak trenails. Beyond the solar a former partition truss (now open) divided bays 3 and 4, the latter a sleeping chamber.

Cae-glas, Llanfrothen, Meirionydd: (NPRN 404888)

A very early fully-storeyed house of Snowdonia plan-type. Tree-felling dates from roof-trusses, mantel-beam and screen of winter 1545/6 to winter 1547/8 were established by tree-ring dating. (RCAHMW Review 2005-6, p 48)

Llanfrothen, Cae-glas (SH 6274 4571)

Felling dates: Summer 1546, winter 1546/7, winter 1546/7, winter 1547/8

An early storeyed-house of the classic Snowdonian plan-type, with a voissor-headed cross-passage doorway and a projecting end chimney. The cross-passage was fully screened with post-and-panel partitions between the outer rooms and the hall. The first floor was open to the roof with two trusses of collar-beam type and two tiers of cusped wind-braces. The principal chamber has a corbelled-out fireplace. (Vernacular Architecture, vol 37, 2006, List 181: Welsh Dendrochronology Project – Phase 10, p)

The house lies SW-NE on level ground in front of a rocky ridge. The main fireplace is on the north-east gable of the building the front door faces south-east.

The water supply was from a spring about 100m away to the north-east of the main house.

Where was the original stair? Across the back wall?

BARN 25m SE of Cae Glas

LISTED Grade II

History: 3-bay boulder-built barn, probably late C17, but either incorporating or re-using 2 pairs of earlier (probably late or sub-medieval) full crucks. These are heavily smoke-blackened, implying an open-hearth context and may therefore relate to the domestic predecessor of the present C16 Cae Glas. This, either reduced by one or two bays, or else dismantled and selectively rebuilt, was encased in stone in the latter period and converted to agricultural use.

Exterior: Small rectangular gabled barn; of rubble construction on part-boulder and part-rock foundation. Slate roof with tiled ridge and unkeelred gable parapets; modern roof lights. Off-centre entrance (to R), with boarded half-door with small plain-glazed window in it. Further entrance to L, with recessed C19 door and later rubble buttress to R; plain-glazed loading bay to R (N) gable.

Interior: 3-bay interior with 2 pairs of cruck blades with pronounced smoke blackening; pegged collar to L truss, collar removed to R. Modern purlins and rafters.

Included for the special interest of its origin as a late or sub-medieval full-cruck building.

Cae-glas cottage, Llanfrothen, Meirionydd: (NPRN 404889)

A cruck-framed, three-bay dwelling, probably a “dower-house”. Dendrochronology established that the cruck-trusses had a tree-felling date range of 1541-71. (RCAHMW Review 2005-6, p 48)

Llanfrothen, Bwthyn Cae-glas (Cottage) (SH 6274 4571)

Felling date ranges: 1497-1527; 1519-49; 1527-56; 1541-71.

A three-bayed stone-walled range with two cruck-trusses, latterly used as a farmbuilding. The range has opposed central doorways and splayed window openings. The range is difficult to interpret but appears domestic in origin because the lap-jointed crucks are smoke-stained. This is provisionally interpreted as a seconday dwelling (dower house) in a Snowdonia unit-system arrangement. The dwelling was probably of crog-lofft (half-loft) type with an open hall/kitchen. Of the four cruck blades, two seem to be somewhat earlier than the others. (Vernacular Architecture vol 37, 2006, List 181: Welsh Dendrochronology Project – Phase 10, p)

The “cottage” was built lying southwest – north-east on a level platform abutted against a rock outcrop at its north-east gable, and is sited a few yards in front of and to the south-west side of the main house. Some of the lower courses of the front and east gable wall may be bedrock.

Was there a later smoke hood or smoke bay?

BARN Situated 100m NE of Cae Glas

LISTED Grade II

3-bay boulder-built barn of late C17 or early C18 date and associated with the nearby Cae glas.

3-bay interior with original collar-and-tie-beam roof trusses and pegged purlins, all with rough scantling.

Cae-glas cowhouse. Llanfrothen, Meirionydd (NPRN 404889)

A detached cowhouse. The roof trusses were dated by tree-ring dating to summer 1703 and spring of 1704. (RCAHMW Review 2005-6, p 48)

Llanfrothen, Beudy Cae-glas (Cowhouse) (SH 6280 4447) Felling date range: Summer 1703, Spring 1704
A detached cowhouse of three bays with a down-slope siting. The cowhouse was entered at the lower gable end; the upper gable having a loft doorway. The two tiebeams have lapped apexes and “wavy” collars. The tethering arrangements have been lost. (Vernacular Architecture vol 37, 2006, List 181: Welsh Dendrochronology Project – Phase 10, p))
